FUND COMMENTARY

We focus intensely on a business’s long-term sustainable organic growth potential. In our view a business cannot grow its free cash flow and therefore its capital value on a sustainable basis if its revenue does not grow on a sustainable basis.

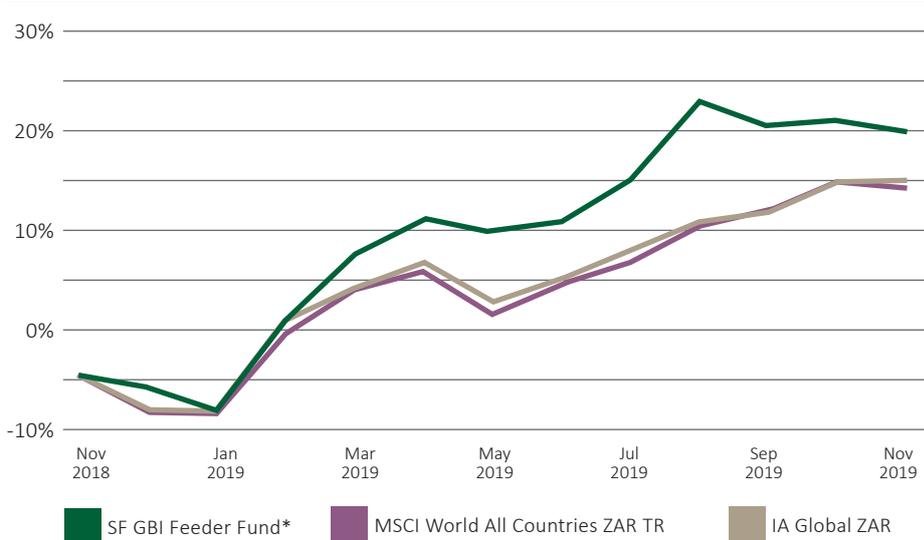

We are wary of businesses trying to grow through large corporate actions. Notwithstanding this, we believe they should at times consider strategic bolt-on acquisitions to stay ahead of the competition. Accenture is a classic example in this context, now being classified as a technology business having started off as an ordinary business consultant, and by doing so leaving IBM far behind on its own turf.

Bob Iger earns huge credit for the way he is strategically building The Walt Disney Co as the world’s foremost entertainment group. He was appointed as CEO in October 2005 and bought Pixar in 2006, Marvel in 2009, Lucasfilm in 2012 and 21st Century Fox in 2018. This cemented Disney’s dominant position with its impressive content library and new product development capability. It also struck a deal to buy Twitter in 2016 but withdrew from the transaction when it was alleged that it disseminated political misinformation. Iger bought BAMTech in two tranches, initially to assist with ESPN’s streaming of baseball games, but after the Twitter experience repositioning it as foundation for the overall group’s future streaming services. It is now called Disney Streaming Services.

Disney+ surprised with its low streaming subscription price of $6.99 p.m. (compared to Netflix’s $12.99) and with an impressive subscriber number of over 10m on 12 November, its launch day in the US. It has since collected nearly 1m direct new subscribers per day. The perception is already that the targeted 90m global subscriber base by 2024 may be too conservative.

Disney is becoming a complete media business now also with fully fledged digital distribution. Iger believes its franchises are its true competitive edge. Disney+ may well define his own lasting legacy. And The Mandalorian seems to have won over George Lucas.

The TER displayed reflects the costs the Fund expects to incur over the coming year, which is based on costs incurred in the past year, current Fund size and estimated inflows. The TER based on the ASISA methodology, which is 2.08%, is higher than the expected TER of the fund due to the high weight allocated to past costs prior to the increase in fund size. Transaction Costs are a necessary cost in administering the Financial Product and impacts Financial Product returns. It should not be considered in isolation as returns may be impacted by many other factors over time including market returns, the type of Financial Product, the investment decisions of the investment manager and the TER.
