FUND COMMENTARY

World capital markets have been stable in April. US headline inflation dropped a full percent to 5.0%, with wage growth moderating to 4.2%. The market may well soon form the view that the Federal Reserve's tightening task is done for this cycle. Interest rates are in process of settling at lower levels than previously thought.

The US reporting season is already halfway through. The most striking feature thus far is that businesses have generally delivered better than expected, both organically and in terms of bottom line earnings. The positive earnings surprise factor at 80% is close to its all-time record. Noticeably, technology firms in particular have delivered well.

Apart from the continuing stock market recovery, signs of a bottoming out and a positive turning of the Growth style of investing at the expense of Value seems to also be taking form. This ties in with inflation dropping quicker than expected and interest rates settling at lower levels than previously thought. Further to this, the economic outlook is pedestrian at best and copper is outperforming gold. Perceptions are clearly growing that Growth can resume its relative outperformance trend over Value of an additional +4% p.a. over time*.

Despite many indications of an imminent US recession and the mini banking crisis, consensus earnings projections and share valuations have turned for the better. The first ever equity bear market before the (potential) recession has already reduced overall market valuations by a third and with a stable bond market and $16tn of cash deposits in US banks, investor nerves seem to be relatively calm.

The best contributors to the overall fund performance during April were Microsoft, EssilorLuxottica and LVMH, with Keyence, ASML and Prosus the main detractors.
