FUND MANAGER'S COMMENT

We invest in companies with the ability to grow their dividends every year, irrespective of economic circumstances, in support of our overall investment philosophy of investing in quality businesses. We believe that a business's capital value will follow its dividends over time (on the condition that it starts at a realistic level).

Whilst most businesses rightfully have very formal dividend policies, we take particular notice when one may change its policy in this context. Our thinking behind this comment is that the particular board indicates with a liberalisation of their dividend policy that the business's cash flow is becoming freer and therefore that more can be returned to shareholders.

We took serious cognisance in 2009 when Accenture raised its annual dividend by 50% (off a low base) and subsequently in 2010 when it started paying bi-annual dividends. We still hold all the shares we bought, enjoying the share's subsequent rerating.

Walt Disney Co is your Fund's largest holding. Their strong cash flow from ESPN was earlier mainly utilised to buy Pixar, Lucasfilm and Marvel and to finance their new Shanghai resort and the upgrading of their theme parks. These movie producers now make good profit contributions.

Disney raised their annual dividend last year by over a third (off a low base), resulting in a 5 year dividend growth record of +27% p.a. They have just announced changing to bi-annual dividends, raising this year's dividend by 15%. This still leaves their dividend cover at a conservative 3.8 times.

It seems that Disney's board has further liberalised their dividend policy and indicate that more of their cash flow can be returned to shareholders.
