FUND COMMENTARY

In June, global equity markets have continued their recovery process from the bear market lows. This has predominantly been driven by growing investor perceptions that US inflation is under control. This relative comfort has been countered to some extent by fears of an upcoming US recession.

This upcoming recession is by far the most anticipated one. Highly regarded leading indicators have provided recession warning signals for over a year already. Consensus independent economist surveys indicate a high probability of a recession and world trade has stagnated. Despite this, though, business profits keep surprising to the upside.

Capital market indicators do not yet reflect a material recession. Strong employment continues to support the US consumer, already with, on average, a relatively healthy balance sheet. A healthy US housing market and positive builders' confidence support overall consumer confidence. Corporate balance sheets are generally also strong. Manufacturing orders/inventory balances have stabilised, indicating stability in the manufacturing sector. The US administration continues to spend around 20% of GDP. The recent three Biden acts indirectly boost government spending by another fifth, increasing overall spending to almost a quarter of GDP.* Energy costs continue to drift. Pandemic-inflicted backlogs have mostly cleared.

All-in-all, our view is that any upcoming, or even imminent, US recession may be a relatively shallow and short one. Seeing that it is, unlike other recessions, already preceded by a bear equity market and lower valuations, and the stock market discounting machine looking beyond the immediate, we refrain from being overly cautious.

The S&P 500 delivered a double-digit return over the first half of the year following the negative performance of last year. In all similar historic circumstances since 1950, it delivered a positive return over the second half of the year.

The largest positive contributors to performance over June were Adobe, Capitec and Pepkor. Alphabet and Keyence were minor detractors.
