FUND COMMENTARY

Equity investors currently face an interesting conundrum. Apart from the usual ‘Sell in May’ consideration, they currently also experience a combination of rising interest rates, sharply rising inflation, the threat of rising capital gains taxes and higher corporate tax rates as well as very high national debt levels, while all of these negatives are accompanied by record share prices. For many this dichotomy may not make logical sense. Voices are already being heard for the Federal Reserve to think about when to start a new tightening programme to control inflation.

Economic circumstances are never exactly the same as before, and one always has to rather consider the current circumstances and the outlook. We, nevertheless, have a lot from history to consider and learn. In this context, rising interest rate cycles have historically predominantly been associated with solid equity performances. Inflation levels between 1% and 3% have delivered the best equity ratings. The stock market has historically, on average, delivered solid returns for a year after the first Fed Rate hike. Increased capital gains tax levels have predominantly been followed by fair equity returns, whilst increased corporate tax levels have also tended to lead to positive equity returns in the following year.

US national debt levels have further increased sharply since the end of 2019, to a record level as a percentage of the US GDP. Whilst this frightens many, because of the changes in interest rate levels over time, interest payments as percentage of GDP have been relatively flat over the past fifteen years. They are currently close to the record low.

These results are quite counter-intuitive to some perceptions. Further to this, historically, the S&P 500 performance from May to August has on average delivered positive overall results, exceeding the traditional record of average monthly losses in September well. The first half of economic upswing periods (where we are currently), has on average delivered twice the performance over the second half. Whilst history does not always repeat itself, we cannot conclude that current record share prices imply an irrational stock market.

The TER displayed, which is calculated using data for the period 1 November 2018 to 31 March 2021, is based on the ASISA methodology, is higher than the expected TER of the fund due to the high weight allocated to past costs prior to the increase in fund size. The estimated actual TER payable by a client investing into the fund today would be 1.04%. Transaction Costs are a necessary cost in administering the Financial Product and impacts Financial Product returns. It should not be considered in isolation as returns may be impacted by many other factors over time including market returns, the type of Financial Product, the investment decisions of the investment manager and the TER.
