PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

The Global Balanced Portfolio returned 1.6% in June, with returns in 2021 so far at 5.1%. Global equities continued to rise in the second quarter, up 7.4%, and have now returned 11.1% in 2021.

Appetite for risk assets has been supported by continued vaccination progress, enabling the gradual lifting of restrictions for many developed nations. Consumer spending and corporate earnings have surged, with monetary and fiscal policy still very accommodative. However, the recovery remains uneven at a global level, as many developing nations continue to suffer accelerating infection and hospitalisation rates. Concern around the spread of the Delta variant has contained inflation and growth expectations in recent weeks, leading to increased demand for government bonds and ‘non-cyclical’ equities such as US technology and healthcare.

Our strategy has not changed over the past quarter. We continue to allocate capital with a constructive tilt towards risk assets, including global equities and credit markets. This approach has been beneficial over recent months, as credit has outperformed traditional government bonds and equities have continued their advance. Returns have also been enhanced by deploying cash into ‘alternative’ assets over the past six months. Our cash allocation has been reduced from c. 10% at the start of the year to c. 4% today, with new allocations to long / short equities, catastrophe bonds and commodities. Within equities, our bias towards Asia has been a detractor over the shorter term, as the region has lagged the global market due to a deceleration in Chinese economic growth. As a long term structural theme, we continue to see promising opportunity for our managers in this area.
