PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

The Global Growth Portfolio returned 0.7% in November, taking returns in 2021 so far to 10.0%.

Global equities retreated in November as fears of the Omicron variant weighed on market sentiment. Energy prices declined sharply towards the end of the month, reflecting the potential for reduced demand for travel. Bond yields fell, benefiting bond holders, and physical gold also rallied as investors sought traditional safe havens. For UK investors, the weakness in the Pound supported overseas investments.

Despite a more volatile month for risk assets, the portfolio proved resilient as a result of its broad diversification of investments. Our quality equity strategies, such as the Fidelity USA Quality Income ETF and the Evenlode Global Income fund, held up particularly well returning 3.6% and 3.0%. Our managers that adopt a more contrarian approach to stock picking had a more challenging time, such as GLG Undervalued Assets and the Stonehage Fleming European All Cap fund, returning -4.7% and -3.4% respectively. Our allocation to broad commodities, through the iShares Roll Select Commodity Swap UCITS ETF, declined by 3.6%, however this was more than offset by our larger allocations to physical gold and long / short equity.

The Omicron variant represents a new yet predictable challenge as the pandemic matures, and is expected to weigh on global growth in the early part of 2022. However, as vaccine coverage and treatments continue to progress we anticipate further normalisation in the first half of next year. This backdrop is supportive of a constructive stance to risk assets, which is broadly balanced across equity styles and regions, credit and alternative strategies.
