PORTFOLIO COMMENTARY

In November, the TM Stonehage Fleming International Fund performance was as follows:

- B share class units rose in value by 0.43%
- This performance was against a rise of 4.18% in the MSCI ACWI NR USD
- Fund and Index performance data sourced from Morningstar

Equity markets were volatile again in November but ended the month by registering good returns off the October lows. A better than expected US CPI print for October led to a single day rally of 5.5% in the S&P 500 Index. The peak inflation narrative led investors to believe that the US interest rate upcycle may be coming to an end, leading to declines in the US 10 year Treasury bond yield, weakness in the US Dollar currency and another strong surge in US equity markets to finish the month on a high. The mid-term elections in the US did not result in widespread wins for the Republicans and in fact the result was an even split in both chambers meaning that government gridlock is the likely outcome for the remainder of Biden's term in office. Markets took this as a positive outcome.

The latest earnings reporting season has been a mixed bag. Many companies commented on the adverse impact of the strong US Dollar on overseas revenue recognition. Several mega-cap stocks such as Alphabet, Microsoft, Meta and Tesla reported disappointing earnings. Conversely, the energy stocks, Lowe's and Deere all reported strong results.

China stocks had a strong rebound from the severe sell-off witnessed last month. Further signs of zero covid policy easing in major cities following local protests over covid restrictions resulted in strong gains for the Hong Kong and local China bourses. The Fund took advantage of this rally to sell the holding in Sunny Optical and to top slice the positions in AIA and Anta Sports. In Korea, the holding in LG H&H was liquidated as it too rallied on the China re-opening hopes and partial proceeds were used to top up the position in Naver Corp. The Fund sold the holding in Oz Minerals following a revised higher offer from BHP.

Some economic data published recently in the US such as employment data and wage growth are still strong overall implying that the Fed still faces an uphill struggle in its fight against inflation. Despite a looming interest rate rise in December, a Santa rally into the year-end appears to be underway.
